SPOTLIGHT ON...

PROMOTING HEALTHY HOMES AND COMMUNITIES

When the ice storm of 2009 dealt a significant blow to Hopkins County, the Family and Consumer Sciences (FCS) program was able to provide information on food safety and security to citizens by utilizing the only mass media outlet available during the first week - local radio. Through live radio announcements, the FCS agent was able to tell residents how long to keep fresh and frozen foods and how to safely store food during the lengthy power outage. Radio announcers also used Extension fact sheets to keep residents informed on the proper way to use generators, kerosene heaters, chain saws and gas appliances. Also as a result of the storm, Master Food Volunteers in Hopkins County distribute refrigerator magnets with food safety information to assist with outreach efforts.¹
