SPOTLIGHT ON...

ACCESSING NUTRITIOUS FOOD

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, 18 percent of adults in Covington live below the poverty level, and the student poverty rate for the Covington school system is 89 percent, one of the highest in the region. Furthermore, nearly 8,500 Kenton County households – a large percentage of them in Covington – receive food stamps. To address this problem, the Kenton County Family and Consumer Sciences assistant works primarily in Covington teaching health and nutrition to school-age children, seniors citizens and other adult groups. Through these efforts, 691 limited-resource children have learned how to make healthy snacks and the importance of personal cleanliness. Ninety-five adults per month learn how to cut food costs and prepare foods. An additional 750 adults are educated through hand-outs and food demonstrations.¹
