SPOTLIGHT ON...

NURTURING FAMILIES

Child abuse remains high, with multiple cases of physical abuse and neglect. The Family and Consumer Sciences Agent offered a 32-hour, 16-week program to parents who had been ordered by the Court to take parenting classes. Eight parents completed the program; all showed progress. The Nurturing Skills Competency Scale showed an average gain of four points, with the highest gain seven and the lowest three. A 60-point self-assessment revealed all parents gained nurturing skills. Two gained 11 points, with an average of five. The Family Court judge decided that parents must now complete a minimum 12-hour parenting program to fulfill court requirements. A three-month evaluation will be reviewed in the next fiscal year.¹
