SPOTLIGHT ON ...

FARM TO SCHOOL

A number of Calloway County volunteer leaders and classroom teachers have expressed that young children do not understand where their food comes from. In response, the Calloway County Cooperative Extension Service collaborated with the Calloway County Health Department and the Calloway County Food Service to provide the "Farm to School" program, reaching 200 students in 2012-13. A post-evaluation conducted with 70 students indicated: 93 percent can explain where food originates; 46 percent understand what Kentucky Proud means when purchasing locally grown produce; and 55 percent now encourage their families to choose fruits and vegetables grown locally at farmers markets and other venues.
