SPOTLIGHT ON ...

FOOD PRESERVATION

Proper techniques for food safety are paramount to the success of the home food preserver. Basic canning, pressure canning, basic freezing, pickling, and jam/jelly making techniques were taught to more than 215 people using USDA research-based recipes, techniques, and methods. Many of the participants were afraid to use the pressure canner, a common fear. Fifteen canners were tested, and 350 packets of canning and freezing material were handed out in the community. Follow-up evaluations showed that 75% of participants were going to go home and use their pressure canner, 95% planned to use proper freezing techniques, and 34% had used the knowledge, materials, and recipes they received.

Housing has long been recognized as a basic human need. Yet, because housing is often a family's largest expense and largest debt, it can be a stumbling block for many. Safe, lower-cost housing options are often limited for struggling families, and this can lead them into crisis. Family and Consumer Sciences Extension helps people improve home safety, lessen their environmental footprint, and strengthen financial stability. It also helps communities promote healthy lifestyles throughout the lifespan by supporting strong family home environments. Please tell us ways you think we can do more.
