SPOTLIGHT ON...

PUTTING FOOD PRESERVATION TO WORK

Eleven people attended a food preservation workshop in Ohio County. Two had never preserved any type of food, and after completing the workshop they put what they learned into practice. All who took the class learned something new, including those who had been canning for years. An experienced canner intends to share updates on food preservation safety with family and friends. At the end of the summer, four participants reported that they had canned, frozen, and dried many fruits and vegetables and had made jams, jellies, and pickles.
