Empowering Community Leaders

As new leaders become involved in the community, they need education on available resources. The local Chamber of Commerce, with leadership from the Owen County Cooperative Extension Service, organized a Leadership Owen County Program to train new individuals to serve in leadership roles. The 2008 leadership class included 24 individuals who attended training sessions on education, health care, services to children, agriculture, and government. Each month members of different teams write a guest column in the local newspaper discussing each training session. Over the past seven years, members of the leadership classes have developed several community service projects including the Owen County Farm & Craft Market (6th year in operation) and the Owen County Vision Project.¹
