ACCESSING NUTRITIOUS FOODS

Many Lincoln County families have gardens or purchase local foods from farmers markets to preserve them. To ensure that proper food preservation guidelines are followed, Lincoln County Family and Consumer Sciences Agent and University of Kentucky Foods and Nutrition faculty taught seven workshops in three counties. Hands-on segments taught 160 participants to preserve cooked and freezer jams, stewed tomatoes, pickled beans, and featured the use of both boiling-water and pressure canners. A majority of the participants had not canned before or had never used a pressure canner. After the program, they reported feeling more comfortable using the pressure canner.
