SPOTLIGHT ON ...

WHAT'S IN A DOCTOR'S BAG

The Green County Cooperative Extension Service's Family and Consumer Sciences agent participated in the pilot program "What's In a Doctor's Bag?" — a series of 10 lessons written by medical doctors to introduce preschool children to the doctor's office and all of the sights and sounds they experience when seeing a doctor. It gives them the opportunity to role-play being doctor. During the course of the school year, the children learned about the instruments in a doctor's bag, sampled a variety of fruits and vegetables, and learned about how their body works. A survey of all teachers concluded: 100 percent of the students in their classroom could tell them what the instruments were called and how they were used and 100 percent tried at least one new healthy food.
