SPOTLIGHT ON ...

FOOD PRESERVATION OF LOCAL PRODUCE

The instability in the economy and the push toward healthier food choices have increased interest in home food preservation. To assist those in Wolfe County who were interested in learning more about proper food preservation and methods, the Cooperative Extension Service Family and Consumer Sciences agent offered five, three-hour, hands-on workshops on food preservation, water bath canning, pressure canning, freezing, and dehydrating. At each workshop, the agent reviewed safe, up-to-date, research-based practices and worked with participants in using the pressure canner to preserve green beans, as well as the water-bath canner to preserve grape jelly and dehydrate beef and apples. There were six to 10 participants in each workshop. Only one participant was experienced in food preservation; most of the rest had not preserved food since childhood.
