In 2013-2014, Family and Consumer Sciences Extension made 10,589 contacts with Franklin County individuals and families.

The Franklin County Cooperative Extension Service partnered with the Franklin County Drug Court to hold bimonthly meetings with drug court clients. By court order, 10 of them attended a class for six weeks. They learned to create a budget, understand the importance of good credit, consider and implement financial goals, and communicate with spouses and children about money. The classes helped clients prioritize spending; understand the difference between needs and wants; and understand how their spending choices affect family relationships and well-being. Participants helped each other identify places to limit spending and ways to save money. Because of the financial health classes’ success, the program will expand to cover nutrition and healthy relationships.
Housing has long been recognized as a basic human need. Yet, because housing is often a family’s largest expense and largest debt, it can be a stumbling block for many. Safe, lower-cost housing options are often limited for struggling families, and this can lead them into crisis. Family and Consumer Sciences Extension helps people improve home safety, lessen their environmental footprint, and strengthen financial stability. It also helps communities promote healthy lifestyles throughout the lifespan by supporting strong family home environments. Please tell us ways you think we can do more.
